

Scenario - Ineffective Retrospective

Why are we doing it if we are already great?

The team has been doing Scrum for a year. They are using the five phases from the Agile retrospective book, but it brought some action items and improvement only in the beginning. The actions decreased and people didn't always follow through on them. Team members argue that they are quite good by now and that this retrospective meeting could be used to do more "real" work in the Sprint. On the other hand, you see the need to reflect and find improvements with the team.
